BACKGROUND:

The INVEST Co-op Mongolia: Steppe and Gobi Region project is a four-year, CAD $1.34 million initiative within the $22,135,773 INVEST Co-op Program. The Program is funded by the Global Affairs Canada (GAC) with a $5,042,417 contribution from the Canadian Co-operative Association (CCA). The Ultimate Outcome of the program is improved sustainable, gender equitable economic well-being for women and men small producers through co-operatives in Indonesia, Malawi, Mongolia, and Peru. The total reach of the program is 69,787 women and men. The majority of rural Mongolian income generation activities center on livestock husbandry and the dairy, fibers, skin and meat industry. Due to many issues including but not limited to access to finance, markets and quality low cost inputs it is difficult for herders to justify dedicating resources required to improve quality and quantity of livestock outputs. This results in low producing animals or products that do not meet quality standards (health and safety, fat content, fiber micron) necessary to access higher markets prices which results in herders focusing on herd size rather than quality. With more animals in competition for already over grazed pastureland livestock are getting less of the nutrients required to support them through the long winter months which makes them less resilient during extreme winter conditions known as dzuds. During the dzud of 2010 the United Nations reported that eight million, or about 17% of the country's entire livestock, had died taking with them many families livelihoods.

The INVEST Co-op Mongolia: Steppe and Gobi Region project aims to improve the lives and livelihoods of 3,000 herder households representing 1,500 women, 200 of which will be women headed households, and 1,500 men. The project will build the capacity of herders' livestock rearing practices to increase quality and quantity of sheep and camel wool production and reduce livestock mortality rates, as well as improve financial literacy and agriculture enterprise management skills. The project will further develop 30 existing co-ops to assist women and men herders' ability to access new markets, extension services and low-cost quality inputs as well as work with the co-operative sector to promote a supportive environment.

ABOUT THE ASSIGNMENT:

The Marketing Coop Business Planner will work in co-operation with MCTIC staff and project cooperatives to assess the feasibility of developing a second-tier marketing cooperative for adding value to herder production (wool, animal bi-product). The volunteer will provide mentorship and guidance to the marketing cooperative as it defines its governance structure, and business model. This is an e-volunteer position with provision for a 1-2-week mission to Ulaanbaatar, Mongolia.
